

Executive Recruiter Launches Monthly eNewsletter Series

By Chris Hingle

HOUSTON—October 19, 2009-- Chris Hingle, president of the Christopher Frederick executive recruitment firm, announced today the launch of a new monthly newsletter series designed to educate business leaders on issues in executive recruiting.

After more than 20 years as an executive recruiter, Hingle said the new resource will give readers insight into his experiences recruiting world-class executives and dealing with a number of issues, from executive compensation to organizing an executive search and more.

“Many people set out to search for an executive without a thorough understanding as to what it takes to successfully recruit talented executives,” Hingle said.

“I wanted to provide a resource that delivers the one fundamental truth which has helped make my firm a success: their long-term value is determined by who they hire today.”

The Christopher Frederick executive newsletter is available free of charge to business executives and leaders at www.cfrederick.com/resources.html. Readers can also sign up for free newsletter delivery via email at chingle@cfrederick.com.

Hingle said newsletter subscriptions have flourished within the last month of distribution, with more executives signing on to receive this free expert business advice each day.

“My readers have already discovered how this newsletter is changing the way they look at executive recruiting,” he said. “It really is an amazing resource.”

The executive recruiter’s first newsletter illustrates three essential factors for organizing a successful executive search; in November, Hingle tackles the often challenge world of executive compensation in “Dollars & Cents.”
